“ My wife and I went out to dinner one night when our first son was only about a year old. It was a nightmare of a night out. We were frazzled and worn out trying to satisfy our baby, keep him from crying, and eat our meal all at the same time. We knew it wasn't working. No one around us could ignore the temper tantrums and screaming of a baby so we just had to pack up quickly and leave. When I took my wallet out to pay, the waitress came up and said the bill was already taken care of. I asked by who, but she wouldn't say. I quickly looked around and saw Chief Irwin heading out into the parking lot. Without a doubt, I knew it was him. I will always remember his kindness and big heart.

“ I am so sorry for your loss. I first met Barry when Kelli and I were besties in High School. We traveled to visit him in Florida... He and his family were so welcoming. I know it's silly, but he always smelled so good! I later realized it was brut aftershave. Everytime I get a wiff of anything similar- I think of him—and that was about 35 years ago. You are all in my thoughts and prayers.
