“ Growing up you take so many things for granted. It's the nature of youth. Only in looking back, as we grow older, do we start to appreciate and understand the love required to make the kind sacrifices our parents made for us. My daddy was a truly remarkable man. The kind that made all the kids in the neighborhood want to spend time at our house. He worked long, hard hours in a foundry but, not once, did he fail to spend time with his children each evening. Usually outside. Playing hide and go seek, kick the can and tag. Many, many times those evenings ended with us playing in the dark and catching fire flies. We didn't go in until mama made us. The day before daddy went home the Lord blessed us with a rare gift. My daddy could barely hear, even with hearing aids, yet that day he missed not a word spoken. He held court, with all of his children present at some point. He knew everyone's name and regaled us with stories of the escapades of his youth. He was still smiling right up till the Lord took him home. He always laughed and sang, "you're gonna miss me when I'm gone". You were right daddy! I miss you already. But I'm so glad you're free of pain. I have no doubt the laughter is echoing through heaven as you re-live the memories again with those gone ahead.
